

By applying electric current to the water, a process called Water Electrolysis, we separate water into two group of molecules.

One group will have Oxygen (O₂) and Active Hydrogen (H⁺) molecules, called Acidic Ionized Water.

And another group will consist of Hydrogen (H₂) and Hydroxide Ions (OH⁻) , called Alkaline Ionized Water.